progress reports

The general contract for the new Arts building was recently awarded to the Redfern Construction Co. Demolition in the area, north of Willcocks St. on the west side of St. George St., is now complete, and work is starting on the building.

The foundation is under construction for the Engineering building on the east side of St. George St. just north of College St.

The new Faculty of Dentistry building, at 124 Edward St., south-east of the main campus, is now in use, and will be officially opened on Nov. 25.

The Margaret Addison Hall, new Victoria College women's residence, was opened by Premier Leslie M. Frost on Sept. 11.

Loretta College, St. Michael's College residence for women, on St. Mary St., is also in use this term, and will be formally opened Nov. 15.

An extension has been added at Glendon Hall to provide an enlarged Library for the Faculty of Law, and a temporary building erected to provide classroom space.

Plans are in progress for Chemistry, Physics and Zoology buildings.

a new university film

"Graduates for Tomorrow", a documentary film about the University of Toronto, has been completed by Chetwynd Films Limited. The film, 16 mm., in colour and with sound, running time 14 minutes, may be borrowed on application to the Department of Information, Simcoe Hall, University of Toronto (Telephone Walnut 3-6611, extension 232). Our earlier films, "Pursuit of Wisdom" and "Through These Doors" are also available.

the library

The Chief Librarian attended a meeting of the International Federation of Library Associations in Warsaw, Poland, in September. He represented the Canadian Library Association, of which he is past president.

On Sept. 16 the Library inaugurated its new book delivery service to professors, the purpose of which is to make the central collection more easily available to regular members of the teaching staff. The Library's new delivery van now provides daily service to 32 stations on the campus. Until the extent of the demand is known, the service is being provided only for members with the rank of lecturer or above. Further information may be obtained by calling local 748.

Also on Sept. 16, the Library inaugurated a new charging system, which uses a duplicate call slip in place of a book card. This system has been used successfully in other large research libraries, and is designed to speed up the discharging of books so that they may be circulated again without delay.

During the summer the catalogue was divided and re-arranged. There are now two main catalogues, the old and the new, each divided into separate author-title and subject files. A special Catalogue Information Service has been instituted, to assist the public in using the catalogues.

the press

On April 29 the President of the University announced the founding of the Dictionary of Canadian Biography, and the appointment of Prof. George W. Brown as first General Editor. In July, preliminary work on this monumental project began at the University Press. The launching of the Dictionary has been made possible by a bequest of the late James Nicholson of Toronto, valued at over a million dollars. First announcement of the founding of the Dictionary brought in a wide response. Over two thousand replies asked for further information concerning progress, and many scholars have indicated their willingness to act as advisors or contributors.

The Director of the University Press addressed the Book Promotion and Editorial Club on Sept. 14 at the University Women's Club.

Mr. Marsh Jeanneret attended the International Publisher's Association meeting in Vienna during the last week in May, representing the Association of American University Presses and acting as chairman of the delegation of the Book Publishers' Association of Canada.

Mr. Roy Gurney, Superintendent of the Printing Department, was unanimously elected a governor of the International Association of Printing House Craftsmen at the recent convention in New York.

In August, the Canada Council purchased 250 copies of Watters: Check List of Canadian Literature and Background Material, 1628-1950 which was published by the Press on February 6, 1959. The copies will be distributed by the Council to foreign libraries and Unesco commissions.

the association of Universities of the British Commonwealth

The Association requested us last spring (too late for the April issue) to draw attention to the availability of the Report of last December's Conference at which the following topics were discussed:

Can the General Certificate of Education examination be made more useful in relation to the admission problem—

Teaching standards and techniques, and the supervision of students in universities, with special reference to the forthcoming expansion

The size of universities and university departments and the need for new university institutions

Copies of Home Universities Conference, 1958: Report of Proceedings may be obtained from the Association's Secretary, 36 Gordon Square, London, W. C. 1, at a cost of 5s. a copy, post free.

friendly relations with overseas students

In an informal international centre at 3 Willcocks Street, many staff members enjoy a personal contact they feel is particularly necessary in work with foreign students.

"We may know what we want our overseas students to learn," one of them explained recently, "but without contact with them on a level of mutual respect, we are not going to know what they think; yet this is an important factor at least to the student and, in the long run, hardly less so to the teacher." Many foreign students, he added, particularly those from India, are accustomed to feel a personal loyalty and respect toward their teachers which is unknown here. By ignoring these feelings, Canadian professors may unconsciously offend or even humiliate a would-be disciple.

It is to bridge such cultural and intellectual gaps that Friendly Relations with Overseas Students exists.

To a certain extent, F.R.O.S. is a service agency. It helps foreign students find congenial accommodation, may send someone along with a coloured newcomer fearful of landlordly rebuffs. It helps untangle difficulties with the Department of Immigration, like the case of a fourth-year Medical student held up at Malton airport on his way back from Jamaica this fall because of incomplete re-entry papers. It also offers comfort to the lonely; a Spanish-speaking girl who visited F.R.O.S. in tears her first week on campus wrote after graduation that she found her native Costa Rica too small and longed to be "back home" in Toronto.

But its executive secretary, Mrs. R. G. Riddell, and her staff stress that these are not its basic functions, just "what a friend does for a friend." F.R.O.S. is a funnel bringing together Canadians and Toronto's 700 foreign students for lunch and conversation in its own common rooms, or for visits to local homes and communities. In effect, it is a club without a membership list or fees.

Nearly half the overseas students are in graduate studies, many of them on scholarships. They come from 60 countries. Conversation among them is apt to be stimulating and diverse, but with few undertones of national frictions. To introduce them to Canadians and each other, F.R.O.S. in the past has run weekly current affairs groups chaired by members of the academic staff, folk music groups, open houses and coffee hours, and exhibits of photographs and art from overseas. This year they hope to add a faculty room where professors can meet senior students from their own and other disciplines in an atmosphere less crowded than Hart House and more informal than an office or seminar room.

Faculty members are active on the F.R.O.S. executive, headed this year by Dr. W. J. McCurdy of the department of philosophy. Many have had students to their homes for dinner or the weekend. From casual invitations, some firm friendships have grown; a Ceylonese doctor, for example, rushed to telephone a Canadian family as soon as he heard from home of the birth of his child. Another faculty family grew so fond of a dinner guest that they visited his parents in Jamaica and later asked him to stay with them after graduation.

F.R.O.S. is supported by service, church and alumni groups and private industry, but depends on private donations for about one-third its operating costs. The University, in addition to providing accommodation, seconds a secretary from the Registrar's staff to F.R.O.S. for ten months in the year.

Copy for the November Bulletin should reach the Department of Information, Room 226, Simcoe Hall (WA. 3-6611, local 232) by Oct. 16.

This handsome new map of the University, present and projected, has been produced in three colours. Folded road-map style, it may be obtained without cost, from the Department of Information, Simcoe Hall. Mounted on cardboard (as illustrated) and ready to be placed on the wall of study or office, the map may be obtained from the Book Department, University of Toronto Press, Front Campus. If you call for it the cost is $1.00. If ordered by mail please include another 14¢ for Toronto, 28¢ for other points in Canada, and 42¢ for delivery in the United States.
